I think Yaqi Han did a good job in her research study this week. After reading her research report, I think she spent a lot of time and effort on computational thinking and educational culture, and documented her literature search process in detail. She started her search with computational thinking and culture at the beginning, narrowed down her keywords when she found the search was too broad, identified the research area as early childhood cultural education based on the search results, and finally reflected on her search process. I believe Yaqi Han will be able to make full use of this literature later in the writing process, and her serious and rigorous spirit is worth learning from.
